The essays in this volume look at how Indian society takes care of the people whom development and large scale infrastructure projects have displaced. They identify significant solutions towards resettlement which can mitigate suffering and enhance environmental sustainability.

In the past ten years or so, displacement by development projects has gone on almost untamed under the globalization pressures to meet the demand for land from local and increasingly foreign investors. Focusing on India, this book looks at the complex issue of resettling people who are displaced for the sake of development. In The book discusses how the affected farming

communities are fiercely opposing the development projects
that often leave them
worse off than before,
and how this conflict is a matter of serious concern for the planners, as it could discourage potential
capital inflows and put

India's growth

trajectory into jeopardy.

It analyses the challenge of protecting the interests of farmers, and

at the same time

ensuring that these issues do not hinder the path of development.

The book goes on to highlight the emerging

approaches to

resettlement that

promise a more

equitable development outcome. A timely
analysis of displacement and resettlement, this book has an appeal
beyond South Asian Studies alone. It is of interest to policy
makers, planners,
administrators, and
scholars in the field of resettlement and development studies.

Laws relating to water in India have diverse origins, including ancient local customs and the British Common Law. The in-depth chapters in this compendium, written by luminaries from various fields, pertain to issues on water and proceed to a discussion of the legal questions that arise.

This volume thus straddles two domains, viz., (i) water-resource policy, management, conservation, conflict-resolution, etc., and (ii) water law. The book also briefly raises and explores the case for a constitutional declaration on water and an overarching national water law. The book is an invaluable resource for policy-makers, problem. Today, so-called 'development-

urban areas, and population redistribution schemes count among the many possible causes. Terminski aims to present the issue of development-caused displacement as a highly diverse, global social problem occurring in all regions of the world.
